

HR TRAINING AND EDUCATION SECTION PRESENTS LINKEDIN LEARNING

Based on feedback from this year's Staff Engagement Survey, I know you would like to see OIST provide more training opportunities. To meet this need, on Monday, November 9, the HR Training and Education Section will begin providing LinkedIn Learning premium accounts for all regular employees and students.

LinkedIn Learning is an online training library with over 16,000 courses taught by experts in their fields. The breadth of content is impressive. Our graduate students can learn about interview and CV-writing techniques, while our administrative staff can hone their critical thinking and leadership skills—or even delve into finally learning Agile methodology. These courses help you to enhance your current professional expertise, while inspiring you to bring completely new skills to your work here at OIST. If you don't know which course to choose first, this service provides personalized content recommendations on any device you already use to access LinkedIn.

LinkedIn Learning is part of a larger push that my team and I are championing at OIST. We want OIST to be a learning organization across the campus in all divisions and sections. COVID-19 has pushed us to expand our training portfolio to include more online options. With support from your manager, you are still encouraged to aim for 1 hour per week of professional development, and LinkedIn Learning can help you meet this goal so you can continue to prioritize and develop your talents. Become the master of your craft, or if your job description has evolved recently, learn the skills you need to feel proficient in your new role.

The success of OIST is based on the success of our staff members, and effective training is a critical part of any professional achievement. If you work in administration, keep an eye on your inbox next week for your invitation to join LinkedIn Learning. If you are a researcher or student and would like to use LinkedIn Learning, please use this request form.

Shima: Okinawa-Hawai'i STEM Education Collaborative

A new outreach program, run by OIST and Hawai'i-based nonprofit, Kua'āina Ulu 'Auamo (KUA), will facilitate a cross-cultural learning exchange that focuses on traditional natural resource management. Called Shima: Okinawa-Hawai'i STEM Education Collaborative, this program will allow about ten students from Okinawa and ten students from Hawai'i to work on projects centered around seaweed farming.
